The Seeds on the Plains

In a small town on the plains, a young lady and her mother had a field. After a long dry period, almost all the water was gone, and many seeds were lost. The young lady said, "We must save what we can."

Each day, she would practice in the field. She made one row, then another row. She put the best seeds in one line and the weak seeds in a separate line. "This is the key," she said. "Good care, good water, and time."

Soon, other people from the town joined her. Some said, "This is hard work. Who will pay for all this water?" The young lady said, "Maybe the town will help. At least, we must try."

So she wrote a report and sent it to the town president. In the report, she said that the dry land needed water and that the people could not live well without help. She also said that a new law could help farmers save water.

After some days, the town president received the report. He came to the field and saw the careful lines. He saw that small green plants began to rise from the ground. He said, "Your work is the key. You did not wait. You began."

Then the town made a new law. Water from the river would come to the field first during the dry
