On a hot day by the coast, a young girl went to the bank with her uncle. Their small boat business had a problem: a break in the water line. A fire was burning near the old store, and the wind could carry it to their boats. The captain of the first boat shouted that they must have control of it fast.

The girl had a drawing of a new water line. She had made the design after school. It would cost only ten cents for each foot, but the number had to be written as a decimal on the report.

Her uncle told her to choose the direct way to the river, across land as dry as a desert. They ran. The girl climbed a low wall and saw a child by the fire. The child had caught his clothes on a stick and could not move. The girl pulled him free.

A bit of water reached the fire, then more. The work continued until the burning stopped. The waves and happy voices filled their ears. The business was saved.
